Hayes's Hobby. [Washington letter Philadelphia Times.]

His pet political hobby is civil service reform. He seems to believe that he has a mission to inaugurate a system that shall make the offices no longer rewards for partisan service, and his Ohio friends, like Garfield, Foster, and Cox, who know him thoroughly, say he can't be moved an inch from the course he has laid out to accomplish this reform. It is no new notion with him. I remember as long ago as 1866, woen he was in the house from one of the Cincinnati districts, that he gave a warm support to the Jenckes bill, which was the first tangible embodiment of the civil service theories. He studied the question carefully at that time, made up his mind, and with characteristic persistency has ever since stuck to the ideas he imbibed then. [Washington letter Philadelphia Times.]

There has been a further demoralization among holders of stocks during the past week, and prices have again declined.

The sales of coal by auction were at lower rates than the previous ones, which had an unfavorable effect upon the coal road stocks, notwithstanding the appointment of a committee by these corporations to devise a plan of action by which they would work harmoniously. The railroad war among the trunk lines again looms up as a probability in the near future, and this tends to weaken confidence in the stocks of these corporations. It is evithe stocks of these corporations. It is evident that unless the managers at their meet dent that unless the managers at their meeting next week adopt some measures that will prove mutually agreeable, we are likely to record as low rates for freight as have ever been made.

The tone of the whole stock market to-day has almost bordered upon a panic, and in some instances the lowest quotations for several years have been reached.

Lake Shore and Western Union Telegraph were the weakest stocks to-day, and the weakness in these soon caused a similar depression in other securities, especially in Michigan Central and New York Central, and up to the close of business this evening there has been little or no recovery from their lowest quotations.

Railroad bonds have been barely syntained.

Railroad bonds have been barely sustained, and there has been but little demand for them. Government securities have been active, but the chief transactions in them have been confined to exchanging the various issues of the five-twenty bonds for the later issues.

GEN. STRICKLER and Green Clay Smith want the presidency as bad as Mr. Tilden and have wanted it longer. Perhaps they might unite with Tilden in making this a test case, "dividing "costs" as usual.

CHAMBERLAIN'S protests and plans are of no avail and the order is to go forth, withdrawing troops from interference. The description of the process by which this conclusion was reached is "good reading." It has a healthful tone. Hampton declares that he will station his own troops about the state house for Chamberlain's protection till the law has settled the controversy. We shall have them falling on each other's necks presently and each protesting that he will resign, the other must be

THERE is an unanimity about the reports concerning Tilden's quo warranto proceedings which puts some stfffening into the rumor. The papers are chary about expressing opinions about it, not knowing, apparently, whether it is an "April fool," or the mania of a disappointed candidate. The American people are slow to believe that even Tilden would conceive such arrant nonsense. and stoop to such a shameless action. The rumor, it not evolved from some reporter's "inner consciousness," has probably been started as a "feeler." If the latter is the case the "managers' need not be long in doubt. Convince the people that this is a reality and they would spit on Mr. Tilden and drown him in the outset.

THE UNDERTONE.

Visitors at Niagara can often hear the roar of the falls, not as a separate sound, but mixed with others, and like some huge organ accompaniment, bearing them on its surface, and swelling their volume without showing its own. They are conscious rather than observant of it, but in little lulls of lesser noises it comes out plainly. It is an undertone too deep down for casual notice, and yet if it were stopped, it would stop everything else. Something like this is the undertone of war in all the late European news. Whatever the scheme of pacification or the promise of acquiescence, with the consular mediation or conference of ambassadors, with negotiations of special agents or heads of governments, with promises of reform or propositions of disarmament, with protocols or powder, rectification of boundaries or persecutions of Christians, floating on the surface and changing the audible tone of the news from day to day, there has been below it all an unheard but not unconscious dread that after all war was the most likely solution of the problem. All jubilation has had an insincere rattle in its note. Assurances of peace have never been confident or hearty, as if the author believed them himself, and most have held a qualifier by the tail in the shape of a doubt of Turkey's acquiescence. This has been especially noticeable since the failure of the conference through the porte's determination to do its own governing in the "popular sovereignty" fashion of the Kansas bill, "in its own way." No matter what promises of accord appeared in the diplomatic cobbling of "the great powers," Turkey was felt to be a factor of unknown force that might set all plans at fault. There was no good in England agreeing with Russia, and Germany agreeing with both, and Austria. France and Italy backing all three if the fatal seventh hung out and refused excellencedenied to it, though it was one thing.

either to agree to anything or recognize of the keenest analyses of human nature. any force in the agreement of the rest.

That is about the state of the case as described by the last news, though a dispatch within an hour may change it superficially. The protocol which has been debated as closely as the "omoios" of the old christian scism, and held back for a crooked word at one time and an epithet of uncertain etymology at another, and grounded on an unexpected comma and nearly bilged on a casual colon, has at last got into port above water, signed and sealed. But now that they have got the protocol what has the protocol got? Nothing. The London Times sulkily admits that it is little better than a boy's imitation of a man's work with a face and method of grave importance and under them what would be a joke if its consequences were not too serious. All sorts of publications from parts of Europe, agree the complication of the protocol leaves the case just about where it was before, or only advanced by the additional chance of more negotiation as idle as all before it. Time is gained, but if anything solider than that, it is not pointed out there or perceptible here. The turning point is Turkey's temper at last. If she were peaceable the long engineering which has perfected this grade of the track up hill to peace would afford an easy run to that point, but she is not peaceable. On the contrary she is on the "rampage" like "Mrs. Gargery," and as willing to take offense or make it as an Irishman at Donnybrook. The blood of the Mohammeds and the Solymans is running again and it is a hard current to stop when it is fairly started. The Niagara undertone grows deeper and begin to overbear the smaller sounds that have floated upon it. War may not come, of course, but it seems more likely than not that it will.

A MATTER OF FACT.

When "Peg Woffington" and "Chris-"tie Johnstone" were given to the world Charles Reade was hailed as a master. On both sides of the sea the products of his pen were impatiently awaited and eagerly sought. But the young artist was arrogant and untractable. He showed a disposition to "take the bit in "his teeth." He assumed as of right the appreciation that had been lavished on him as a gift. Impatient and intense he recognized pretty nearly the worth of his creations, and he demanded that the public which had followed him so quickly in the childhood of his art should rejoice with him in the strength of its manhood. But humanity is soon out of conceit with one who berates instead of flattering. A picture of the weaknesses and wickedness of human nature is not so agreeable as one filled with fine feelings and glowing with generous impulses, and the painter soon suffered from neglect as much as he had enjoyed from over praise. Artistic excellence has little to do with popularity and not only did Charles Reade lose the popular ear, but would-be critics pointed out the rapid and black descent from Christie Johnstone to "A Terrible Tempta-

Fielding has become a "top shelf" author; "he is coarse," say we. "He "is the only one who ever dared draw "'a man," said Thackery, and it is probable that this latter faculty of fearless truth-telling has more to do with the neglect of Fielding and the decline of Charles Reade than any "coarseness" they wrote. Preachers become unpopular if they continue to descant upon the moral deformities of the chief men in the congregation or hold the mirror up so that all their hearers see themselves. It matters little that Charles Reade's course was, in truth, progress, pure and simple, the steady improvement of an artist. One who paints fat little cherubim and round and rosy angels will not reach the highest realms of art to be sure, but these make pretty pictures and we are very complacent if we think that we are the originals. So when Reade began to delineate the devil in human nature, it mattered little that his conceptions were grander and his execution stronger, we cried "let him be anathema,"

"His plots are unreal, his characters are the murky creation of a delirium. We are not so vile as he would paint us." In this manner we put him in the pillory of our displeasure. He must take a grim and lively satisfaction now in seeing_real life roll out situations, circumstances, characters which match the creations of his imagination as exactly as if he had divined and described them in advance. For Charles Reade is no meek and patient master, waiting for time to vindicate him. He is virulent, and vicious to some extent, reveling in a row and a ruction, and delights to pay back hard hits in kind. Comparisons are odious, but in the Beecher trial those who believed in the innocence of the accused persons took much comfort in conning over "Griffith Gaunt," citing situations there which condemned when Reade, drew them as improbable and moral were now felt to be perfectly compatible with innocence. In California the other day a parallel to "A Terrible Temptation" was enacted-a parallel which followed with harrowing closeness the details of that story's plot which was so generally condemned as vicious, declared to be totally improbable, and artistic

A woman, in her desire to present her husband an heir, yielded to exactly the "terrible temptation" Charles Reade's heroine did, and like her without sin. The flooding of a valley in Massachusetts a year ago and in Connecticut the other day, by the breaking of the mill dams, were so exactly counterparts of a similar disaster recorded in "Put Yourself in "His Place" that Reade's description might be taken for a vivid piece of "reporting" of these real disasters. The 'Mollie Maguires" in Pennsylvania and the band which did the Chico massacre the other day are more than counter-parts for similar deeds recorded in "Put yourself in his place." The list could be extended, but this suffices for another example of the close relationship of fact and fiction, which makes the novelist the historian.

THE NEXT HOUSE.

Has the Administration Lost its Grip? [Springfield Republican.]

The administration has certainly lost its grip on the organization of the new house. It was ressonably within Mr. Hayes's power to have it organized in sympathy with himself and his policy; but the dis-appointment of the southerners that he did not come to time more sharply on the removal of troops has greatly weakened the prospect, and probably thrown the opportunity away. But we can not advise opportunity away. But we can not advise the party democracy to be too sure of their commanding a majority when the house assembles. There will be several disturbing elements; first, the conflict of personal ambitions in a somewhat hopeless party organization; second, the disposition of a considerable proportion of the southern democracy to sympathize with the Hayes administration; and, third, the southern deministration; and, third, the southern de-mand for the Texas Pacific and other sub-sidies. It is already given out that the democratic mambers from the southwestern states will not abide by the demo-cratic caucus unless it pledges itself to the Texas Pacific railroad and the Mississippi levee appropriations. These are en-tering wedges of considerable size, and some one or all of them are not all unin short, President Hayes may turn out to have some influence in the organiza-tion of the next house, and Tom Scott will certainly have to be "seen."

An Accursed Locality. [Salt Lake Herald.]

A blighting curse seems to have fallen n everybody who had anything to do with the massacre; even the country seems to have suffered from the same cause. The Mountain Meadows are a dreary, forbidding waste of sand and sage brush, cut to pieces and gullied through by heavy storms. At the spring near where the emigrant camp was located is a scene of desolation. The luxurious grass which tempted the emigrants out of the main traveled road is no more to be seen, and the spring is a sunken pool of slimy.

Did Brigham Justify the Massacre! A Tribute to His Honesty. It. V. R. in Cincinnati Commercial,
In all the ups and downs and angry contentions of the past few years in the South Osrolina quarter, you may have observed that I have ever spoken well of Chamberlain. He is a capital man, an honest, sincere man, with convictions so strong that he has put his life in peril to uphold them. He is as superior to such fellows as Patterson as day is to night, and the only thing that we find against him is that he associates with such birds of prey, or has anything to do with them. and the only thing that we find against him is that he associates with such birds of prey, or has anything to do with them. But here we come upon the usual difficulty. The republican party in South Carolina is corrupt, low-toned, imbecile, and such chaps as Patterson are a natural outgrowth, Chamberlain must either recognize them and work in the same harness, or he can have no influence with his party. By trying to reform and elevate the low-toned mass down there called the republican perty, Chamberlain got himself clear outside of the lines, and would have been left upon the roadside like a dead dog but for the fact that the democrats adopted the "straight out" policy, and republicans were obliged to take Chamberlain, as he was governor, and the only man who could bring national troops into the state to counteract he shot-gun campaign. But for the 'straight out' policy, which really means "carry the election by murder if necessary, but carry it." the republicans would not have touched Chamberlain with a forty foot pole. They were driven to it, and the case stands out conspicuously as the first instance of an indorsement of a real reformer by the South Carolina republicans. Ordinarily they have no use for a reformer by the South Carolina republi-cars. Ordinarily they have no use for a refermer. Their declarations in favor of "retrenchment and reform" are as hollow and deceifful as the declarations of the democrats in favor of equal rights. One means as much as the other, and neither means anything. The republican policy in that quarter is corruption, and the democratic policy is cruelty. Chamberlain is conspicuously the one South Carolina republican who has never used politics to make money. His republicanism is from conviction, and he has done all that mortal man could do to make it respectable in that state. He has wasted his law practice, endangered his life, and fooled away all his money trying to be governor, not because he wanted to he or heaves the place was at all desirabe, or because the place was at all desirable, but he got into the harness, and from his view of things there was no way but to pull through. His instincts as a reformer are so earnest, and his desire to make the republican name respectable. in South Carolina so strong that he went before the legislature and urged them to reduce his own salary to $3,000 a beginning in the work of retrenchment. He pleaded for economy and reform with tears in his eyes, and for the selection of decent and competent men for judges. But talk of this sort to the South Caroli-

But talk of this sort to the South Carolina legislature is about as effective as the reading of Watts's hymns to a drove of nules. In the face of these appeals the legislature one day took advantage of the governor's absence and elected Moses and Whipper to the two most important circuit judgeships in the state. They did it openly, defiantly, and for the purpose of showing his reform ideas. He would not sign the commissions of these chaps for "judges." He protested that the civilization of the cavaller and the roundhead were in peril. The legislature, never having heard of the cavaller and the roundhead, concluded that they had been generals in the rebel army, and that Chamberlain had gone pell mell into the democratic party. He was so unpopular that he was not allowed to speak at Orangeburg, the misguided blacks driving Orangeburg, the misguided blacks driving him from the platform with hoots and yells, and wild cries that he had sold out to the democracy, and was no longer the black man's friend. Nothing but the matchless cruelty of the democrats in seeking to overcome 36 000 black majority by the shot gun, drove the republicans into a nomination of Chamberlain.

He has been serving as governor the past four months without pay and without prospect of pay. His treasury is empty. Tens of thousands of dollars have rolled into Hampion's coffers, because the tax-paying portion of the community recog-nize him, while Chamberlain's treasury has received but nine hundred dollars! Chamberlain to-day owes two thousand dollars to one of the Columbia banks, money borrowed to pay his personal ex-penses while acting as governor. Nothing but a stubborn will and the clearest convictions would cause him to make so many sacrifices as he has in warfare against the corruptions of his own party and the aggressive cruelty of the democrats. He is a man of decided ability and culture—a graduate of Yale—and was pronounced by the late Reverdy Johnson to be one of the best lawyers in America. He has an interesting family and the relief they will feel ing family, and the relief they will feel should his claims to the governorship be decided adversely can not be measured in words. For months his devoted wife has lived in daily and nightly dread that the hand of an assassin would take her husband. He dare not walk the streets of Columbia, and the tread of federal senti-nel is ever heard in front of his apartments at the capital. He has been for three-fourths of a year in a perfect hell on earth. He was at the head of a government that could do nothing but exist in a ss way, under the protection of fed-bayonete. What satisfaction is such eral bayoneta. What satisfaction is such a life to a cultivated, quiet, domestic man, a natural scholar and student, having little in common with South Carolina politics and pistols? He has only sought to maintain his position through the most devoted loyalty to the principles of civil liberty to all men. He is a believer in equal rights, and in the capacity of the negro to take part in government, and his policy is to teach them, and not drive them with the shot gan and revolver. He believes that if he is overthrown, free speech is at an end in South Carolina, and speech is at an end in South Carolina, and one of the most important results of the war lost. He stands for principle, and stands because he can not fall, and goes onward because he can not turn.

But the battle seems hopeless. One after another of the South Carolina republicant cans have given up the fight, convinced that a further tussle with the old order of things is useless, and that perhaps the blacks will learn something by a season of experience. But Chamberlain stands out a firm believer that revolutions can not go backwards, and that the cause of equal rights must triumph.

BASE BALL.

Indianapolis vs. St. Louis Browns The First Win, Score 5 to 3. The First Win, Score 5 to 3.

The opening game upon the Southstreet grounds was played yesterday afternoon, and the Indianapolis nine tosses another ball won from St. Louis. Game was called at 4 p. m., with John Brennan umpire, and the home club at the bat, and the first two innings were blanks for both nines. Quest opened the third with a hot drive which carried him to first, McSorley and Mack followed, and aided by errors of the Browns, in which Blong took an active hand, one run was scored. The fifth and sixth added each one, and the sixth aiso gave the Browns their first opening, owing to McSorley's wretched throwing to first, which flew wild, and sent the runner to third. This "calamity" somewhat rattled the field, and the Browns improved the opportunity with three runs, tieing the score. The ninth inning opened with the score unchanged, and Rocap at the bat. He retired at first. Nolan reached first on called balls. Quest drove Nolan to third and himself to first by a hot grounder past third base, and drove Nolan to third and himself to first by a hot grounder past third base, and McSorley's hard hit to center, which was fumbled and thrown wild, carried the latter to third and Quest and Nolan home. The Browns were put out in one, two, three order, and the home nine de-clared the winner, with the following

Rus earned—None.

The game had no specially brilliant points, with the exception of Nolan's pitching and. Flint's catching. Flint's throwing to second is "sure death," and but one of the Browns yesterday had the nerve to fest his luck. He died. The umpiring was bad, but both clubs suffered from the erroneous judgments. In the game this afternoon it is understood that Halford, of the Journal, will umpire: the game this afternoon it is understood that Halford, of the Journal, will umpire; the visitors objecting to Walcott, Jones, Deane and Eden, and swearing without stint at Brennan. It can be said for Brennan, his errors were weaknesses of the head, not heart, and it is probable, this being his first umpiring this season, he was rattled by the novelty of his position. The Browns are strong except in right field and pitcher. The home ciub is well headled and shows the careful training he handled and shows the careful training by Mack. The third base, however, is weak, but by sending McSorley to right field, Rocap to center and bringing Warner back to where he rightfully belongs, this defect can be remedied. Yesterday McSorley made two grevious errors at a critical point, but his fine swinging of the bat relieved much of the prejudice in consequence thereof.

Hon. Wm. Parsons entertained a large and intelligent audience at Masonic Hall last evening with his lecture on "Michael last evening with his lecture on "Michael Angelo," tracing the career of that wonderful genius from infancy to his death at the age of ninety. Mr. Parsons spoke without notes, and his effort was highly appreciated by all who heard it.

notes, and his effort was highly appreciated by all who heard it.

Judge Newcomb delivered his lecture on the "Rights of Married Women" before a large gathering at the court house last evening, a number of ladies gracing the occasion with their presence. The judge stated the law relating to the disabilities and property rights of married women, which he pronunced a curious jumble of inconsistences. The lecture was practical in its bearing, and was well received by the audience. The judge advised that the interests of married women be placed under the protection of their property for their support upon order of court. Judge Blair delivers the next lecture in the course upon "The Unwritten Practice."

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE

"Richelieu" is such a character as merit loves to delineate and criticism to praise. So well is it known and so generally accepted is Mr. Barrett's personation that definition or analysis matter little now. Mr. Barrett's admirers are legion, and last night they found fresh food for their admiration. It was a finished piece of acting, strong in the strong parts, or the "loud" parts, which is an equivalent in the eyes of many, and for them always a proper place for applaces. It was also vivid and intense in the quieter phases. Mr. Barrett's merit as an electionist must in fairness be admitted by those who can find nothing good ted by those who can find nothing good in his acting, and perhaps the charm of his voice has much to do with the admi-ration that is freely accorded bim. From the lowest whisper to the most furious floods of declamation his voice is used always acceptably, and sometimes with most piercing effect. He delivers the striking passages with which Richelieu abounds with great effect for the most part, never weakly at the worst. His whole performance is such that there will doubtless always be dispute about. There is room for inprograment it must be adis room for improvement it must be admitted, but that Mr. Barrett has already reached the realms of great acting must also be admitted. It is the quality of his greatness, not the thing itself, that may be disputed.

The support was evenly good without special excellence. Mr. Norton, however, caught the popular favor and Mr. Morton sustained his part well. Miss DeForest as Julic, was womanly and earnest, making an acceptable personation. To night "Hamlet" will be given.

BARRETT ACTING THE ACTOR.

To the Editor of The Indianapolis News: It happened me to sit with several genthemen last evening who were in good part pleased with the artificial attempt made by Mr. Barrett to represent an actor in the part of Richelieu. It passes my understanding how he should other than in the part of Richelieu. It passes my understanding how he should other than offend any taste not educated by Wild Bill or McKean Buchanan, or wholly uneducated. Mr. Barrett in Richelieu, or in any part of gravity and state, is simply and palpably Mr. Barrett. Under the cardinal's red cap and the flowing gray wig; beneath the gown and trailing robe; behind the pencilling and rouge; below the changing tones of voice, the gaspe and coughs, impelling the strides and zigzag gesticulation indicated by all of these was—Mr. Barrett. If there is a rule of rhetoric, of action, of display that warrants Mr. Barrett I have never seen it. Certainly a man is not to be blamed for wishing to be a great actor. The frog was perhaps not to be blamed for attempting to show how large the ox was, though he killed himself. But a man ought to know something of his capacity. Nature never meant Mr. Barrett to represent Richelleu. It would be difficult to mention the worst fault of his acting last evening, it was so evenly bad, so elaborately stagy, so tainted with himself in fact. It reminds me of a "personal" that appears and reappears in the New York Herald: "Piner Haidsich."

"personal" that appears and reappears in the New York Herald: "Piper Heidsick—and only Piper Heidsick." We have Barrett—and only Barrett, It is something worse. It is Barrett tsying to show an actor in a character, He is not showing Richelieu, but an actor as Richelieu. He is always one remove from the character, and therein lies the secret of his failure. He acts acting. He is on a painful ter, and therein lies the secret of his failure. He acts acting. He is on a painful atrain from the first—a little man wearing a large man's clothes. He has to hitch up his pantaloons and pull down his vest—to hold himself always so as to overcome his clothing—and he don't do it. He can not do it. It was not intended. He should change his tailor, or get a tailor of his own—play what he can play without straining. play without straining.

One instance of the staginess, of the artificiality, of the affront to the realities will illustrate the faults that overlie Mr. Barrett. He wished to show the audience that the cardinal, after an extreme oratorical and above and affort of the internal after the cardinal affort of the internal after an extreme oratorical and approximate affort of the internal affort of the internal after an extreme oratorical and approximate affort of the internal affort rical and physical effort, falls into a dead faint. When a man has the stiffening ta-ken out of him by a bullet, an apoplec-tic fit, a blow, an announcement of sometic fit, a blow, an announcement of some-thing untoward, or by the process called "fainting," he falls limp and nerveless. It is next to impossible to do such a thing this way with much stage effect. So Bar-rett improves on it, as it were. When he faints he does it rigidly—it is easier to get to the floor in good stage effect style that way. Everybody knows, of course, noth-ing is the matter with the actor—that he is in no degrees from his feintness and nois in no danger from his faintness and no-body feels that awful clogging up within that such an accident would naturally have. Now that is Barrett—an actor who nave. Now that is Barrett—an actor who can fall into a stiff limpness—a rigid nervelessness. If you want to know how badly he plays, remember with such distinctness as you can how Jefferson personates Rip Van Winkle, then imagine how Barrett would do the same. Think it out and then you will see how far away from a great actor he is removed.

The auditor of state is in receipt of the following letter of inquiry from the auditor of Benton county:

If so, how can the emer-gency clause take effect at once, when the taxes of 1876 (for the collection of which settlement is to be made the 16th inst.) were due and pay-able in whole or in part at the option of the taxpayer. December 15, 1876, almost the faxpayer, December 15, 1876, almost three months before the act referred to was passed? A Dissertation on Hogs.

An I., B & W. train some days ago killed a few pigs or hogs, and the owner demanded damages and presented a bill. The road agent, Mack McDonald, deemed the damages excessive, and to his reply in response has received the following:

response has received the following:

Sir-Your letter on "pigs," in answer to my postal on "hogs," is received. I am aware that pics are "running creatures," but what creature can walk more majestically than a six dollar hog? Two of them come to $12.00, which I am aware is a piggish sum to ask a railroad to pay; but Mr. Garner thinks it rather hoggish for a rich railroad coporation to retuse to pay so smail a sum for two noble animals called hogs. Be they pigs or be they hogs, the statute makes the road liable for double the value of the hogs or other stock killed. Hoping this will be satisfactory on the hog question, and assuring you I am always willing to hear from you on pigs, I remain yours as long as grass grows or pigs run. Last night, at No. 2 Geneva street Last night, at No. 2 Geneva street, Elias Sutphen, an immediate neighbor, interfered to prevent Hugh Pfaff from killing his (Pfaff's) wife, the women having called to him for aid, and running at the time to his house for projection. To-day the physicians determined that Pfaff was fatally hurt, whereupon, this afternoon, Sutphen surrendered to Mayor Caven, and is now in the central station.

HOME RULE IN THE SOUTH. The Argument from Southern Expe-

[Springfield Republican.] There are still a good many people in the north who can not get over the idea that the accession of Hampton and Nich-olls means the surrender of the negroes in South Carolina and Louisiana to a condition little better than that of servitude. The idea of southern democracy is closely associated in their minds with the lawless sway of rifle clubs and "bulldozers," and sway of rifle clubs and "bulldozers," and the campaign fiction of t e "confederate brigadier," shooting niggers indiscriminately, vowing death to the school system, and plotting the overthrow of all the results of the war, is still to them a reality.

It is perhaps of little use to argue with such people, but it may be worth while to restate for their benefit the admitted results of democratic rule in states imresults of democratic rule in states im-mediately adjoining South Carolina and Georgia was one of the first southern states to escape from carpet-bag sway, and no other is now so completely controlled by the democrats; Tilden's majority last November lacking but a few of 80,000 votes. Yet there is no other state in the south where life and property are so safe as in Geogia; no other where outrages upon the negro are so few. Moreover, while under the last year of Bullock's thieving carpet-bag administration the school funds were practically confiscated and less than 7,060 negro children were in the public schools, and the number had risen under the last year of Gov. Smith's administration to 57,987, and promises soon to reach as high a ratio of the whole school population as is attained in most northern states. Finally, when this 80,000 democratic majority had a Unithis 80,000 democratic majority had a United States senatorship to confer last winter, it selected, not an antediluvian blatherskite of the Bob Toombs type, but a liberal representative of the new order, whom the negro republicans in the legislature were glad to help into power, and who vindicated their confidence by heartilly ensured to the first necessary provinces.

who vindicated their confidence by hear-tilly supporting the first negro nomination made by the president.

It does not take a long memory to re-call the day when stories of disorder and violence were constantly coming from Ar-kansas, when republican claimants to offices the propile had conferred on their offices the people had conferred on their opponents were beseething the president for troops to keep or put them in power, and when reckless adventurers were firing the northern heart with appeals for sup-port because, if they were allowed to fail, the negroes would be remanded back into the negroes would be remanded back into slavery. At last, however, Judge Poland, of Vermont, with an independence that will always be remembered to his credit, and against a White house pressure that was too much for many other republicans, demonstrated the absurdity of Claimant Brooks's pretensions, showed how the people had elected the democrat Garland governor, and carried through congress a recognition of the latter's administration. Almost at once the through congress a recognition of the lat-ter's administration. Almost at once the chronic disorders ceased, the people de-voted themselves to their business, the state scrip, which had been a drug in the market, began rising in value, till it now sells, at but a small discount, and the new governor organized a school system which his successor is helping to further develop. When the legisla-ture came to elect a United States sena-tor last winter, a majority of the republitor last winter, a majority of the republi-can members joined the democrats in voting for Governor Garland, on the ground that he had been a faithful servant of the state as executive, and meri-ted their indorsement for the higher office. His course in the senate has alomes. His course in the senate has airready vindicated the action of these republicans. He seized the first opportunity to declare that he should support President Hayes's announced policy, and remarked the complete that the senate has a senate of the senat turned the compliment of negro republican votes which he had received for sena tor by casting his democratic vote for the confirmation of a negro republican.

That intolerance and injustice still prevail in portions of Georgia and Arkansas is undoubtedly true, and is inevitable as true. But that peace and prosperity have steadily increased since democrats gained control, that the negroes are given better educational advantages than before, and that the highest honors of the state are conferred upon men who sympathize with the new era, are indisputable facts. South Carolina and Louisiana could not possibly be worse off than they have been under the sway of the carpet-bagger; there does not seem any reason to doubt that under Hampton and Nicholls whites and blacks will slike reap the same henefits that un-Hanpton and Nicholls whites and blacks will alike reap the same benefits that under Smith and Garland have come to Georgia and Arkansas. At any rate the experiment seems worth trying. Furthermore, there is not anything else now to try. The alternative is a most conspicuous failure: we must try this, and make the best of it.

The High-Toned Tramp.

[San Antonio Herald,] Yesterday a gentleman residing in a neat, modest cottage in the suburbs caught a tramp prowling about his back yard, evidently trying to steal something.

"That's what I was looking for," was the impudent reply.

"Didn't you see it on the other side of the house?" retorted the gentleman,
"How was I to know that was the front door? No silver door-plate, no bell, no telephone, no statuary, nor servent to take your hat and cane. Tell your boss there is a gentleman out here who is waiting for his breakfast."

When the gentleman got back with his shotgun the tramp was not there any
